Dream - Dare - Do

Lenoir-Rhyne College went back into action on Aug. 22. The students were moved in and ready to start their new classes. The freshmen moved into either Morgan or Ike, and were ready to get their new life on the road. They were finished with the boot camp days of school, attending back to back classes from 8 AM to 3 PM and ready for 2-3 classes spread out over a day. They were finished with being high school kids and ready to become College Students, and that they did. Their first year at Lenoir Rhyne was spent DREAMING of what they wanted to do with their lives. They had the opportunity to take many different classes and figure out which ones they liked.

Sophomores and Juniors on the other hand were now in their second and third year of classes. They had already chosen a path of classes and were DARING themselves to take the next step in that particular path. Daring to jump into the next level of classes, daring to achieve what they dreamed of as a freshman.

With the class of 2005 out the door, the class of 2006 was ready to step up and fill the position as the leading role on campus. They had spent the last 4 years dreaming and daring and it was now their time to step up to the plate and do it. This year has been about DREAMING, DARING and DOING.

you'll die

The 2005-2006 HACAWA is dedicated to:

Dr. Jeffery Wright

This years HACAWA is gladly dedicated to one of the finest men Lenoir-Rhyne College has to offer: Dr. Jeffery Wright. This man loves to teach and it shows. He is involved in anything and everything around our campus. And on top of everything, he is one of the nicest guys you will ever meet.

As a student, it is extremely difficult to let your mind wonder in one of Dr. Wright's classes. You can tell how interested he is in the supply and demand graphs of the day by watching him jump around with joy all over the front of the class room while he explains it to his students. One would be amazed how much he can jump around and not knock over the glass of water he always has.

In addition to being a wonderful professor of Economics, Dr. Wright is also committed to making the Lenoir-Rhyne students' time here on this great campus the best it could be. He guides the direction of the student body by serving as the Advisor of the Student Government Association, along side of Dean Anita Gwin Johnson. He is also the Faculty Advisor of the Sigma Kappa Sorority and a brother of the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity.

If you are participating in anything on campus, it is highly likely that you will get lucky and run into this fine man somewhere along the way. From basketball games to soccer games, he is there cheering the Lenoir-Rhyne Bears to victory. Dr. Jeffery Wright is a true Lenoir-Rhyne Bear.

Left: Sitting in the Cromer Center speaking to everyone that passes

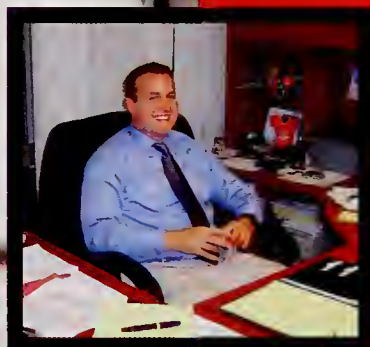

Below. Walking to his office after class, pretty worn out from jumping around and making supply and demand graphs interesting to the common student.

Right. Participating in one of the many campus activities he is involved in: Aerobics.

"He could make teaching about a rock interesting."

-Jacob Goedken

"He is very student oriented and student focused."

"Let me assure you that the knowledge you have gained here is a gift that is yours to keep forever. And though you are leaving Lenoir Rhyne, Lenoir Rhyne will never leave you."

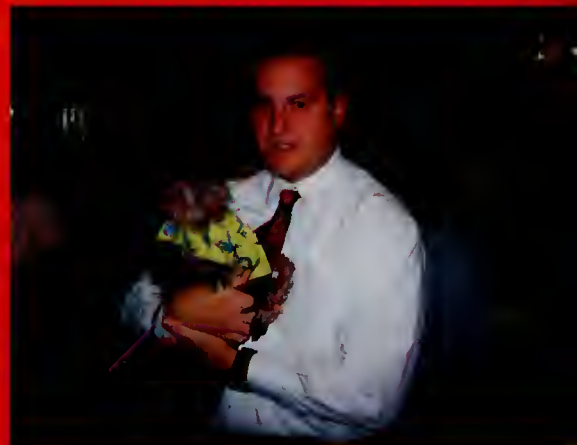

HOME COMING 2005

Prologue Begins....

Where the DREAMS
begin...

Prologue got off to a great start. All Freshmen are moved in and ready to go.

Has school ever been "unexcused"? You know what you mean. (Prologue is always at the top!)

Dr. Simmons helps the freshmen get settled into their new homes. (Do you think she put the whole first capsule down?)

Someone has to do the dirty work. Teachers and Admin. carry bags filled with sand to help complete the playground project and break off a final day of volunteering.

Lending a helping hand to build playground equipment is just one of the few projects freshman experience during prologue

The freshman class of 2005 line up for one BIG group shot. They are exhausted from the many fun and exciting prologue events they participated in throughout their first days of college.

During prologue, students get to experience a "Night in Hickory" to help them begin to see their new surroundings in Hickory. This group has fun as they visit the bowling alley.

Beginning college can get complicated. Many Freshman figure this out fast as they are tangled together and search for the solution.

Spring Fling

A week packed and loaded full of fun and excitement!

X-TREME!

Spring fling is a week of fun activities and games provided by the SGA. Events range from air basketball and rock climbing to Sumo Wrestling and Sward Battling. This week allows students some time to just kick back and have fun like a kid again in the midst of their hard spring classes.

"Hello down there!" These two ladies have a bird's eye view of the students gathering around them. Taking a break from classes and acting like a kid again.

REACH!!!! Going the extra mile is not always an easy thing to do, but it is always worth while in the end.

"So do I have broccoli in my teeth?" Sumo Wrestling was just one of the many events students participated in during Spring Fling

AND THE CROWD GOES WILD!

Just Hangin' Out! Many students chose to just hang out after a long day of stressful classes

Battling your friends with soft objects is a great way to relieve stress.

LR Students Help Hurricane Victims

On August 29, Hurricane Katrina made landfall on the Gulf Coast of New Orleans, Louisiana. It proved to be the most destructive and costliest Natural Disaster in the history of the United States, costing an estimated 130 billion dollars, causing over 1,302 deaths and 1 million displaced people. Instead of holding campus debates on whose fault this tragedy was, the students and faculty of Lenoir-Rhyne College took action. Almost every organization on campus helped out in any way possible.

Our campus raised money, donated blood, and accepted displaced college aged students into the Lenoir-Rhyne family. By selling T-Shirts and Marti Gras beads, Lenoir-Rhyne collected over $1000 while the community pancake breakfast raised a total of $2,208. When the Red Cross came to campus, they collected over 40 units of blood from students to take to New Orleans and the surrounding areas to help out. Our College also offered free tuition, room and board to college students displaced by the hurricane. In addition they received free food from Aramark and free books from College Book Stores of America Inc. But one of the many relief efforts that were not documented were the ones brought on by the fellow students living right next door to our new family members. "They gave me everything..from TV's to video games..they made this transition easy as possible..they accepted me lovingly into their wonderful home."

The victims of Hurricane Katrina that Lenoir-Rhyne College took in and helped out after they lost everything pose for the camera. Included in the picture are Randall Walker, Aryonne Taylor, Ervian Pinckney, Juan Burns, Chisom Onyilofo and Joshua Ross.

Amanda Pearson shows the shirt and Marti Gras Beads she just bought in support of the victims of Hurricane Katrina.

This Lenoir-Rhyne College student offers her help by flipping the pancakes.

You don't have to be awake to show support! These Lenoir-Rhyne students took a nap after they ate at the pancake breakfast at 6 AM!

More Lenoir-Rhyne students show their support by eating and sleeping at the community pancake breakfast.

Phillip Bostian stands outside one of the home football games, selling T-Shirts and Marti Gras beads to raise money for the hurricane relief.

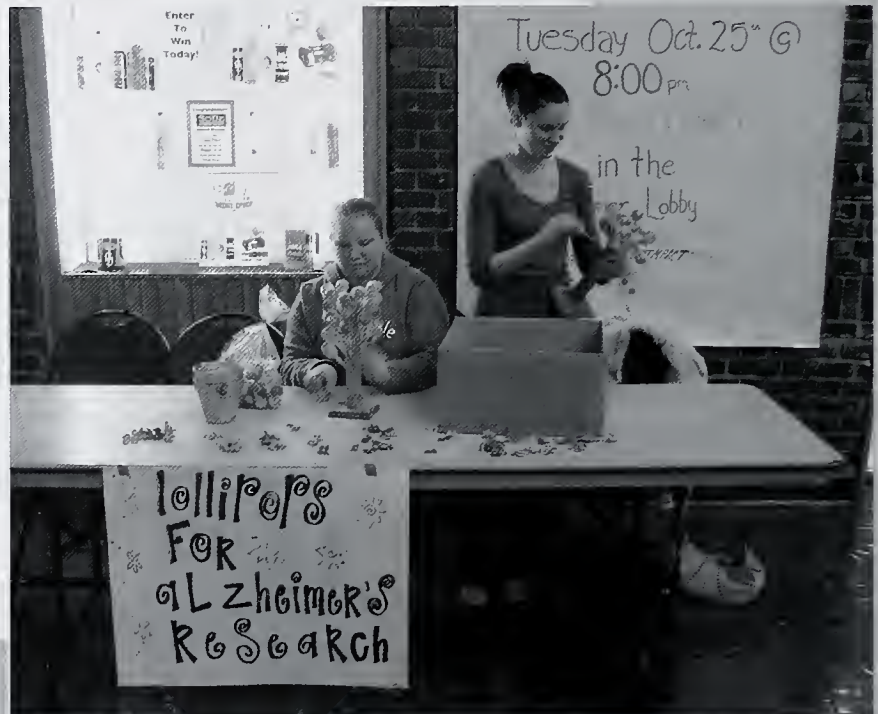

Bruce Hayden helps out at the pancake breakfast by stirring the eggs to be served.

Live in Green That Painted Mask

Antithesis of innocence,
Howl, and throw everything out the window like you think I am
Somebody in a black cloak and a painted mask

Who dances on the other side of the fence where it's Green—
And constantly a cauldron of the most manic
Species of neo-alchemy.

I ask everyone to believe that
Fire is sexy like birds circle carrion,
Giving way to natural forces that neither you nor
I am in any sense in control.
Yet only at her own yes or no.

Abandon all hope all ye who enter here—
This terrain was never meant to be traversed by such as you.

Me either.
Memento mori;
No one's getting out of here alive;
No sheep and no
Goats.

I've simply not met with that end—although I'm trying,
Spiraling into and arrowing through the concentric circles of Yeatsian gyres,
Whispering explicit secrets to the Furies, giving Suggestive glances to those in the blood, whether they be Giving way to the atmosphere or not.

Seraph

You alone then, Lord, are what You are and You are who You are. For what is one thing as a whole and another as to its parts, and has in it something mutable, is not altogether what it is.

St. Anselm, Proslogion

How unfortunate son,
Heir apparent.
Mr. Potential wrapped in clockwork,
Dying limp in a dayglow prophylactic.
I am a fine hunter of spiritual directors.
You are too, child.
And we are brothers in so many other ways.
I want to know more about Russian roulette.

Don't You?

Vindication?
Isn't there something poetic about random grey matter on mobile home walls?
Isn't there?
Rorschach would be so proud.

How I wish we were paralyzed by some cosmic force,
Wounded by the Dragon himself.
I want a battle to fight.
So tired of this fucking shore — tired of the Bait, and tired of the sport.

I hate games. All of them.

In the meantime perhaps we should consider making something
Metaphysical of ourselves, you and I.
We've been waiting here a long time.
And we have played a lot of games.

Lowell Ashman does his thing in Minges

Lowell Ashman explains Article 3 Section 112...

He's staring at a portrait.

The portrait of an illuminated figure. She is glowing. Her face seems flawless, it radiates healthiness, just enough sunlight. Her blonde curls sweep at the side of her face over her right eye. He would gently push it back, as he could see its annoyance to her. But at the same time, he would think, she looks absolutely irresistible. He steps forward, closer to her. The lighting in the picture portrays an almost halo-like figure around her head. She is dressed in a simple white gown. He could almost feel it. Cotton. Light and airy, something to wear in spring. He longs to know her, to touch her, to talk with her. But as he reaches out, to his touch, she is cold and flat. Her smile is deceiving. He has met her before. She makes eye contact, she flirts, she smiles, she invites, but that's as far as she goes. There is a wall encasing her behind the frame. She is guarded. She has had only one great love in her life. Her soul mate. She breathed for him only. Nothing else mattered or even existed for that matter. She was solely captivated by his presence. But he is not with her. Leaving her crushed, smashed, battered, forsaken. It was as if he sucked the life right out of her. Her heart no longer exists, just the exoskeleton of what was once there. She is closed forever. Occasionally, a man will pass, and she will catch his eye. She will invite him to watch her, adore her, glorify her. He'll make her feel angelic, and she will breathe on. A little glimpse of innocence will be restored. She will be able to smile with dignity—for a while. She breathes only to exist, and she would stop breathing if God were ready for her.

He's staring at a portrait.

He's falling for a portrait.

-Shannon Howell

Road Rage

On the highway off to Corinth:
Chariots in the dust.
Oenomaus catching up:
Behind--but only just.

Pelops just a bit ahead,
Hippodamia by his side--
If they can reach the Isthmus first,
He'll have her for his bride.

And if her father overtakes
The pair, he'll kill the suitor.
He's done it thirteen times before
With every fool that wooed her.

(At the palace back in Pisa:
A row of heads on pikes:
Sad, dead eyes; blood-caked necks;
Skulls whitening on their spikes.)

Look! He's drawn abreast of Pelops.
Look! He's poised to win the race.
Look! His axle's snapped. He's thrown!
The ground rears up to shear his face.

His neck has cracked. Its linchpins pulled,
The chariot veers awry.
In time the driver jumped. He cheers,
Retrieved as Pelops swings back by.

Alternative Spring Break

"During the 2006 Spring Break, Lenoir-Rhyne College sent 3 groups of highly motivated students to spend one week helping communities recover from the effects of the 2005 hurricane season. Sea of lights overhead, Linoleum desert underfoot.
Dodging shopping carts
And angry mothers
Should not be this disheartening.
Ever feel like your life passes away
While staring at shelves of deodorant,
As if the fate of the world
Depended on the brand of aluminum zirconium
On your armpits?
And suddenly you discover
The quiet boy from high school
Has a wife and a wallet
And a kid on the way.

Speaking of corporate invasion
And customer satisfaction,

You can't be blind to the little guy
If he doesn't exist,

On Reading Nietzsche and Arguing With Men

The pages of Friedrich Nietzsche's Beyond Good and Evil are laced with seeming misogyny that is at best humorous and at worst, bizarre. It seems no love was lost between Nietzsche and the "second sex." A younger more pro-active me might have protested the book with zealous disgust and dropped it in the "Free Books" box that sits on the sidewalk in front of the used bookstore downtown. But in the transition from rose-colored glasses to reading glasses I found two little lines of wisdom buried in the midst of all Nietzsche's callousness that fought to shine out like a rough diamond in a dim, unexcavated cave. "The same passions in man and woman nonetheless differ in tempo; hence man and woman do not cease misunderstanding one another." Fifteen years of having more relationships sour than sweeten while repeatedly mulling over this quote, have helped me discover some basic truths that I wish all women could know. The first is that even the roughest of diamonds can be well worth the toil of excavation. The second is that we should be neither ashamed of nor discouraged by the lifelong polishing process most men require. The third is that cunning, skillful argument is the best polishing tool available to a woman.

It's no secret that, as women, we spend a good portion of our lives "fixing" the men we choose to be with. When I met my boyfriend six years ago, he was the typical unattached male—aimlessly roaming wherever and whenever he pleased, often in tragically uncoordinated clothing. He drove too fast, partied too much, and didn't get haircuts as often as he should. In sum, he needed "fixing." For two years, I dismissed him as "sweet but goofy beyond repair." But when I finally realized that my own diamond, a good-looking, broad-shouldered, dark-skinned body builder, had about as much inner beauty as the slimy-wet moss that grows on the underside of rocks, my thinking began to change and almost a year later I found myself dating the sweet, goofy fixer-upper and wondering where the heck to start.

It wasn't long until opportunities presented themselves. He fell into the habit of asking me which shirt he should wear when he dressed for our dates. More often than not, my choices were either the yellow Pittsburgh Steelers T-shirt or the black one. For months, I tried persuading him to revamp his wardrobe. I went shopping for him and put the new clothes in his closet while he was at work, hoping he would end up wearing something fashionable, even if only by accident. It never happened. One Sunday morning, while he was still sleeping I stared, half-hopeless, half-angry at the Superbowl T-shirt he had worn the night before and then haphazardly tossed over top of my bookshelf. As I snatched up the shirt, I found Nietzsche staring back at me.

Disappointedly remembering lines like, "If a woman seeks education it is probably because her sexual apparatus is malfunctioning" and "If you go to see the woman, do not forget the whip," I meant to throw both the book and the shirt out the door. But just as I was about to hurl them into the chasm of feminine sovereignty a breeze blew and the scent of book pages and boyfriend stopped my arm in mid-arc. Five minutes later I was curled up in my double papasan, reading Nietzsche with a steaming cup of coffee in my hand and my boyfriend's shirt draped across my shoulders. As I read again, "The same passions in man and woman nonetheless differ in tempo; hence man and woman do not cease misunderstanding one another," I somehow knew that both my boyfriend and my book were worth holding on to. In a flicker of insight I saw us as two people similar within, but at odds without. I had gone about it all wrong. I didn't need to get rid of him or even change him. He just needed polishing and I needed to realize that the toughest undertakings required the cleverest approaches.

I enlisted the help of my best friend slash fashionable gay man who, at the first opportunity, asked my boyfriend if he had any shirts without football logos.

"Not really," boyfriend replied.

"Well, we need to dress you up," best friend said. "Which stores do you like?"

"Ah, um," boy friend stammered.

"Because I know people at Abercrombie and I get a discount there," best friend continued. "So, if you two don't have any plans tonight..."

Boyfriend paled. "Don't we have to go somewhere tonight?"

"No sweetie," I replied. "We don't. I think you guys should go shopping. You'll have fun." Boyfriend mysteriously vanished.

Two hours later there was still no sign of him. I went back to my double papasan for more Nietzsche, this time finding an uncharacteristic phrase surrounded by what I interpreted as more misogyny. "Wisdom is a woman." Hmm, maybe Nietzsche just needed polishing too. As I mused on the possibility, my sweet fixer-upper appeared in the doorway laden with more shopping bags than a newly divorced woman. I smiled, feigned surprise, and relished a moment of passions in tempo.

Girl in White

In Response to Louis Le Brocquy's painting

I could say something about your skin
Being like the delicate porcelain of
Your pedestalled powdered vase,
Or notice how your hair creeps
Around your neck like rust-curved knuckles;
How your hands are prim and sleek
Like the folds of your marble dress.

But what if I said there is Something else that reaches past those
Set pink lips, frosty cheekbones,
And column posture?

By looking at you
I can chisel through to your quick
And reveal your gasping self.

Deconstruction

It wasn't the raw tenderloin
from Marco's wife,
or the prolonged sniffing
of Vito's twin sister in the playground.

It wasn't the 52-diamond leather collar appropriated from Angelo,
nor having Dante's territory
drunkenly marked.

It's when Il Padrino mentions having Angelo's mom neutered, to ease his mind, that the family decides
it's time to restructure the pack.

He's staring at a portrait.

The portrait of an illuminated figure. She is glowing. Her face seems flawless, it radiates healthiness, just enough sunlight. Her blonde curls sweep at the side of her face over her right eye. He would gently push it back, as he could see its annoyance to her. But at the same time, he would think, she looks absolutely irresistible. He steps forward, closer to her. The lighting in the picture portrays an almost halo-like figure around her head. She is dressed in a simple white gown. He could almost feel it. Cotton. Light and airy, something to wear in spring. He longs to know her, to touch her, to talk with her. But as he reaches out, to his touch, she is cold and flat. Her smile is deceiving. He has met her before. She makes eye contact, she flirts, she smiles, she invites, but that's as far as she goes. There is a wall encasing her behind the frame. She is guarded. She has had only one great love in her life. Her soul mate. She breathed for him only. Nothing else mattered or even existed for that matter. She was solely captivated by his presence. But he is not with her. Leaving her crushed, smashed, battered, forsaken. It was as if he sucked the life right out of her. Her heart no longer exists, just the exoskeleton of what was once there. She is closed forever. Occasionally, a man will pass, and she will catch his eye. She will invite him to watch her, adore her, glorify her. He'll make her feel angelic, and she will breathe on. A little glimpse of innocence will be restored. She will be able to smile with dignity—for a while. She breathes only to exist, and she would stop breathing if God were ready for her.

He's staring at a portrait.

He's falling for a portrait.

Sweet Dreams

I got to walk in heaven
one night in a dream
Where they all came out to greet me
and help me like a team

They introduced me to this place
where never was a frown
The souls of all my kindred past
now high above the clouds

And none of them were old or weak no sickness to be seen
My kinfolk seemed so healthy now that I too felt pristine

This place so warm and beautiful with comfort that abounds
And memories from my childhood were flashing all around

Some things I did not recollect and thought them out of place
I soon began to recognize they compliment this space

All these things about my past of which I cared the most
Came to me once in a dream
when I was but a ghost

So when it's time for me to pass
the fear I feel the most
Is for my loved ones left on earth
whom I will wait to host

Frame

What is this strange creature of the dawn,
Who hesitates not,
But plunges aggressively
Into the depths of memory,
Winding ever so slowly
Through the still shots
And motion picture shows,
Through the sticky fingers
And sugared lips
Of my gluttonous childhood?

Has my caravan arrived,
Summoned to carry me into the dusk
Of some unnamed fate?
Will there be spies there,
Refusing my oblivion,
Beckoning,
Prodding in the name of nostalgia,
Coaxing me back to change my frame
Once again?

PI KAPPA PHI

Our brotherhood is based on a certain set of values. Those values are encompassed in the acronym CLASS, which stands for: Character, Leadership, Academics, Sportsmanship, and Service.

These values guide everything we do as a fraternity; they are what allow us to make the most out of our college years and prepare for life in the real world. It is our belief that these values must not be allowed to lay stagnant in the hearts of a few men. They must spread from man to man, class to class, generation to generation; therefore, the most important member is always the one to whom the torch of these values is about to be passed.

It is during the recruitment process that we seek to find the men who will carry the torch of our values into the future. We are in search of future Men of CLASS, men who have the potential not only to better themselves, but to help their brothers work towards the same ideals.

Depthless

What do you see?
Life slips through the gaps
What were you thinking?

I see nature reclaiming her own
She will crumble all walls, given time
Fences cannot quell that, however tall

A flower growing there
Is a syncopated beat in the rhythm
That makes you stop and wonder

THETA XI

Theta Xi Fraternity is a national leader in the educational and social development of its members. Our successes and diversity have been celebrated by over 60,000 members since 1864.

The Purpose of Theta Xi is to provide a college home environment for its active members in which fellowship and alumni guidance lead to wholesome mental, moral, physical and spiritual growth. The values on which Theta Xi was founded on are passed onto new members in "The Quest for Theta Xi."

Theta Xi is one of North America's oldest social fraternities and the only such organization founded during the Civil War. Headquartered in St. Louis, Missouri, Theta Xi services Chapters and Colonies all over the United States. The Fraternity offers a comprehensive new member education program called Alpha Nine and countless educational programs for its members. Theta Xi is the only National Fraternity to receive two Association of Fraternity Advisors (AFAR) "Excellence in Programming" awards; one for Values into Action (Values training) and then second for Benchmarks of Excellence (Chapter Operations training).

Breakfast of Champions

Perhaps it was the black and white days in America that gave the nutrition facts, on every pale cereal box, color.

Native Americans knew when their food expired because there was nothing left of it, and then they made tools with the remains.

Thoreau, no doubt, pondered whether his stomach's formaldehyde content would preserve his natural luster
30 years after death.

The Lone Ranger had room
for hydrogenated vegetable oil, while Tonto strictly regulated his caloric intake.

Synthetically enriched natural flavors are now a part of our well-balanced vitamin fortified, breakfast.

With a mouthful of niacinamide and pyridoxine hydrochloride, don't let
"Pass the yellow #6, please,"
frighten you from your daily valued bread.

In the brochure about being
A college girl
I'm not sure what I'm supposed to be doing
On a Friday night
But I'm sitting in this hard desk chair
Eating cheap, stale, cinnamon-covered cereal
Out of a plastic bowl
I could be in a crypt
It's so quiet on the hall
It's always this quiet on the hall
How long has it been since I went outside?
How long have I had this cereal?

COLOPHON

This is not, I admit directly, the HACAWA that I would have liked. I started as faculty adviser in August of '06, and found it about one-fifth complete, with very little (text, photos, even scores and such) to work with beyond that. I have, given my course and research loads, done the best that insomnia could manage. (I had some initial help from Holly Lucas, but of course she had lots to do this term as well). I offer no excuse for this, however: the HACAWA has suffered from long-term institutional neglect, due to a middle-school yearbook budget and a lack of people willing to contribute. I apologize for this, and indeed for the '05, and the '04, on behalf of the College.

The '07, however, has more than a dozen people working on it, is ahead of schedule, and will be in color. I can, alongside my apology for the past, promise that the future of the HACAWA will be something else.

-Dr. Paul Custer, Assistant Professor of History, Faculty Adviser
